Globalisation has greatly impacted society, because it has increased transportation, but it still didn't change how people behave. For example, the number of people who have had a flight has increased from 222 million in 1975 to about 1.5 billion in 2025 (UN Tourism and the UN system). Even though, the Global pandemic has impacted the tourism industry negatively as it got the industry's numbers to what it was in the 90's, the industry later exceeded pre-pandemic levels. (UN Tourism and the UN system).

This means that global transportation has got really accessible through the years. This enables a bunch of positive aspects, such as freedom and development. (University of Hawai'i Press;). This phenomena makes the interconnectedness of society more accessible. Someone from Pakistan can go to Hawaii and Yugoslavia, without much restrictions. (University of Hawai'i Press;). Since this interconnectedness allows the access of services, it is no surprise many travel for opportunities. (University of Hawai'i Press;).

With travel, there is again a problem, is that the local cultures remain intact, opposing globalisation's interconnectedness, with problems rooted in xenophobia. This is no joke, when somebody is transporting their "life" for a service, they can start with less opportunities because of their color, gender or beliefs.

A study suggest from 2022 that, the acceptance rate of people, depending on their skin color changes. For instance, a white females has an acceptance rate of 94% whilst black males are down at 80% (Ridgeway). This isn't just a weird number, primary sources support the idea of acceptance rate of 94% whilst black males are down at 89%. (Krugeway). This isn't just a weird number, primary sources support the idea of discrimination. For example, Sohail Inayatullah, working in higher education, experienced his identity being questioned: "It was this look that the examiner asked me about next. She asked me what type of skin complexion I had. "Brown," I had written on the citizenship form. "No. The only categories we have are fair, medium, and dark." "Well, I am not dark and I am not fair." She wanted to argue that I was dark. My being medium made her color problematic, since she was not fair and she was clearly not as dark as me. We both fought for the middle spot, with her finally relenting." (University of Hawai'i Press). This makes people uncomfortable, as they are literally debating about who they are. The weird custom described earlier wasn't just weird, it had consequences: "...once the FBI stalked me, thinking I was part of an operation selling passports/drugs to and from Indonesia"

Local cultures do persist, but it doesn't have to be negative! Sources, (Britannica) and (Ratnam, Karthiga), suggest that, stopping intergenerational racism, involves changing education, the personal experiences and the outside effects, to shape one's beliefs. This means that through education or environment switch, people's beliefs, or even their xenophobia can be changed. This is supported by a study, by (Villavicencio, Adriana, et al.), where a school with a majority of white males in higher positions and lower positions with minorities, showed that through educating the staff, the behavior and beliefs can change in a positive way. This supports Karthiga's hypothesis, because it already shows improvements because of education.

One of the major flaws of the globalization and how it affects societies, socially is the fairness of travel. Educator, Sohail Inayatullah, recalls in his experiences, being forced to say or do things clearly uncomfortable. One of these difficulties were, the uncertainty and mistrust in people. He says: "I expected the examiner to be an intimidating, tall, white, Texan male whose nose could ferret out illegal aliens..." this shows uncertainty and mistrust between people globally, hardening travel. This hardens travel as it could slow down necessary customs. One of these examples is from Sohail, in the immigration office: "As the interview began, I swore to tell the truth, all the time pondering on the nature of truth and identity. But that my hands were raised and not concealed..." imagine the negative energy present, in here no one is safe from biases, which could be accelerated through xenophobia as seen earlier. Here we can see that customs are slowed down through biasness and mistrust: "It was this look that the examiner asked me about next. She asked me what type of skin complexion I had. "Brown," I had written on the citizenship form. "No. The only categories we have are fair, medium, and dark." "Well, I am not dark and I am not fair." She wanted to argue that I was dark. My being medium made her color problematic, since she was not fair and she was clearly not as dark as me. We both fought for the middle spot, with her finally relenting."

A major problem, or rather fact in the social aspect of globalisation is the fact of unequal opportunities. The article asks this question clearly: "Who benefits from the interconnected processes often referred to as globalization?" A story by Sohail Inayatullah about traveling internationally: In the story, Sohail, talks about the benefits of globalization, and how they are biased. He shares a story, migrating and becoming a citizen of the United States. In there he had to endure some customs that might have erased a part of his identity. He recalls memories of not wanting to become "americanised" as he says. "ue, citizenship means changing one's identity and becoming American-ized. But I did not want to be called Sam like my friend Saleem"(Sohail).

The potential, that globalization can actually benefit societies is very real. Even though globalization's benefits are far distant and its problems are omnipresent for far too many places. The are mostly acknowledged, is its inclusive opportunity for all. Some actions being implemented are fair and inclusive rules such as inclusive and fair trade rules for international trade, for investment and finance. Which here, takes account of all interest, rights and responsibilities. All of these to achieve MDG's (article from 2004!).

McNeil, Taylor. "The Long History of Xenophobia in America." Now.tufts.edu, 24 Sept. 2020, now.tufts.edu/2020/09/24/long-history-xenophobia-america.

The United States had always a problem with xenophobia, even if it was the nation of immigrants. For example, in 1750 Benjamin Franklin, one of the fathers of the nation, had worried about foreigners speaking their own language among themselves, turning the lands swamps, who did he worry about ? Germans... Erika Lee, author of and award winning book (America for Americans: A History of Xenophobia in the United States), stated "it's important to know this complex history to be able to overcome it." She also says: "Xenophobia is a form of racism that has been embedded in our laws." Through many campaigns, softer or harder, as Lee states, " ...fear of being displaced pushes some lawmakers and others to double down against certain immigrants, especially those from Latin America, Africa, and Asia. Immigration is treated as a zero-sum game; new immigration is a threat to us already here. We can't both gain at the same time. Your gain is my loss." This type of belief and mistrust hardens the expansion of positive globalization, especially in communities. The world might change fast and efficiently, but cultures...they stay and adapt..

Studies suggest that mistrust and biasness can negatively affect free travel, as seen from a paper by oceedings of the National Academy of Sciences (PNAS). The study suggest, that the aproval of citizenship for black males is at 89% whilst the white females stand at 94%, and that people from non muslim countries. whom were white, had an aproval rate of 96% compared to the, blacks from mulsim majority countries where this number dropped to 86%. This means that the skin color, more specifically, the difference from being black to being white widens the gap in the approval rates. The gap clearly shows how in both occasions whites had more approval rate compared to blacks and muslims. Which could be the case of mistrust as seen in (sohail's) example.

UN Tourism and the UN system. “50 Years of Tourism: 1975–2025.” Untourism.int, 2025, www.untourism.int/50-years-of-tourism-1975-2025.

Globalization has greatly atributed to the rise of tourism exponentially. For instance, the rise beetween 1975 and 2025, is almoost a seven fold! From an inital of 222 million in 1975 to 1.5 billion in 2025, it is no joke that interconnectess is reshaping how pepole live, but cultures and belifes adapt?... .

A study suggest that, anti-racism, in education can change the people’s behivoral, decrasing xenophobia and racism---even in adulthood. The participants, worked in schools where the higher positions were held by white males and the lover job positions by other racial minoroties.

Through education,, much of the staff realised that they have behaved differently wwith kids. Their improvement peaked, when they finally started self regulating themselves, asking questions like " I think I might be doing...".

Humans can really evolve over time. Something in Shakespeare's romeo and Juliet points towards this: "...aincent grudge...". This is the reality.

Over time, our hatred becomes a bias, having forgotten the origin. By passing it down, the generational trauma can evolve into an unkown, but bad feeling of hatred, forgetting the origin of it. Matt Rettig suggests, that we are all born free, in the kind of bias. It is in our life, the expiriences that makes us eveolve, one part personal and the other is cultural. It is then a conclusion that education is the key. This underlines the start of creating healtheer personal expiriences and later resulting in a healthier culture.

Sigmund Freud's , psychonalaitic theory, suggest, that the study which involves anti-racist education is so important. The moral standards, established in childhood, accaunst for a generation, chaning the parints will also result in the change of the culture around us, which will become a self sustaining catalist.
